ARTISTS IN OKLAHOMA - A HANDBOOK

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

There are many facets of the story of Oklahoma art and artists that remains to be told. This paper covers an area about which little has been written; because of this lack of information there is a need to study the achievement of the artists of Oklahoma.

It is not the intention of this writer to deal with the subject with any degree of finality. This work represents the beginning of a task the completion of which will probably demand years of diligent research. At least within a limited time and with the resources immediately available, this paper is a beginning.

This paper is presented in nine sections: (1) prehistoric artists who left evidence of their passing through Oklahoma; (2) early painters who traveled the wilderness, making pictorial records; (3) art in the schools; (4) revival of Indian art; (5) the P.W.A. Project; of the 1930's; (6) museums which gained impetus from the P.W.A. Project; (7) art exhibitions which are held in numerous cities; (8) the forties, fifties and sixties in art; (9) and biographies of the working artists of the state. With these topics the writer feels that all areas of Oklahoma art have been touched briefly.

It is the wish of this writer that this series of biographies be continued by others who have pride in the art heritage of Oklahoma.

CHAPTER II

THE BEGINNING OF ART IN OKLAHOMA

Prehistoric Artists

Oklahoma is regarded as one of the youngest states; actually it is one of the oldest in terms of ancient culture.

It is geographically located in the heart of the continent where men passed easily from east to west or north to south; geologically, sometimes covered with tropical forest, sometimes the bed of a great inland sea and sometimes just short of the glacial ice cap. Oklahoma became what she is when the first man looked upon her landscape, a land from a prehistoric lake bed, gently rolling hills, rising toward their greatest height, the Black Mesa Country in Cimarron County, where the vestiges of an ancient culture are found.

A prehistoric people of the Folsom complex lived in what is now the Cimarron Valley of the Oklahoma Panhandle perhaps as long as 10,000 to 25,000 years ago. Traces of these people in the form of the distinctive Folsom projectile points, have been found in this area.

In the 1950's Martin Wiesendanger, professor of History of Art at the University of Tulsa, took small groups of students into the Cimarron River canyons to photograph and study the petroglyphs and cave drawings of the prehistoric people who had been inhabitants of the Panhandle area. Working among the eroded cliffs, the students found an apparent map of the Cimarron River and a primitive calendar packed into the canyon walls. In the Mesa de Maya there is an entire cliff dwelling, complete with metates cut into the stone floor, giving evidence of prehistoric occupation.

Near Black Mesa, Professor Wiesendanger's students found the legend of the "spider woman" depicted; a petroglyph of a crocodile, a warrior with a spear and atlatl, and a primitive horse, all beautifully drawn.

Evidence of the existence of the Basket Makers has also been found in this area:

. . . These were a primitive people who knew nothing of the bow and arrow or pottery making, but who fashioned elaborate baskets, mats and cradles. The best estimates place the occupancy of the Basket Makers at about the time of the Christian era.¹

A later people known as the Slab-House Culture flourished from 1000 to 1400 A.D. Remains of their dwellings have been discovered in the Oklahoma Panhandle. The dwellings were pits lined with flat stones; a central post supported the rafters which were covered with reeds and earth. These people were primitive farmers. They made pottery. They used the lance, the bow and arrow, and a variety of stone instruments.

The Ozark Bluff Dwellers were flourishing along the Illinois River in northeastern Oklahoma about the same time as the Basket Makers in the Black Mesa area. The Ozark Bluff Dwellers occupied the caves and cliffs above the streams. They were skilled in basket-making and practiced some agriculture. The weapons were the dart and throw stick.

A later culture known as the Ozark Top-Layer Culture (Illinois River area) possessed the bow and arrow, a variety of bone and stone implements, and were makers of crude pottery.

Another culture flourished about 1200 A.D. in the Arkansas River Valley (Bradens Bottoms) in northeastern Le Flore county, near the village of Spiro.

This culture had built earth mounds over a large section of eastern Oklahoma. The best known of these mounds is the great Temple Mound, a funerary earth structure. The mound measured 262 feet in length, 106 feet in width, and 39 feet at the highest point.

In the winter of 1933-1934, Dr. Carl Guthe, chairman of the National Research Council Committee on State Archaeological Surveys, asked Dr. Forrest E. Clements, chairman of the Anthropology Department at the University of Oklahoma to investigate the report that a prehistoric Indian mound had been discovered and was being exploited by local men. There was evidence that the report was true.

In the summer of 1936, after overcoming a number of legal technicalities, the official excavations began. Dr. Clements explained the arrangement for the excavation of the Spiro mounds:

The scientific excavations in the Spiro area were conducted by the Anthropology Department of the University of Oklahoma as part of a university sponsored Works Project Administration project. The University of Tulsa and the Oklahoma State Historical Society acted as co-sponsors and gave financial assistance. Mr. Clark Field, Tulsa, Oklahoma; and Mr. Alfred Reed, Grove, Oklahoma, were among private citizens who gave generously of their time and money in support of the work.²

²Forrest E. Clements Ph.D., Historical Sketch of the Spiro Mound (Museum of the American Indian-Meye Foundation 1945) pp. 48-58.

During the excavations, a chamber (burial tomb) made of cedar poles was found in the largest mound. Remains of men, women, and children were found buried in the sides of the mound.

Textiles of fibers, feathers, and fur; plaited baskets, bags, and nets; excellent ceramics, hard finished and varied both in shape and decorative motifs, were discovered in the mound. The Spiro people were also traders or travelers as obsidian, copper, conch shells, and quantities of deep-sea pearls were taken from the mound.

The material recovered at Spiro is now in the Stovall Museum at Norman, Oklahoma State Historical Society at Oklahoma City, the Philbrook Art Center at Tulsa (on loan from the University of Tulsa), and the Woolaroc Museum at Bartlesville.

A general conclusion can be drawn. Two types of prehistoric people inhabited the region that is now Oklahoma: one, a migratory pre-bow-and-arrow hunting people; the other a sedentary group of cave dwellers who left some evidence of artistic development.

The Indians migrating from the northwest into the Great Plains were also prehistoric inhabitants of the land that came to be called Oklahoma.

No other primitive people have so appealed to the popular imagination as have the North American Indian of "the Plains." The life of the Plains Indian holds a peculiar romantic fascination to the artist, the writer, and the small boy. They know the Indian as a brave warrior who fought to save his hunting ground from white encroachment; as a dweller in a picturesque skin-covered tepee; and as a mighty hunter and a daring horseman.

The Indian's canvas was an animal hide. The colors were principally earth pigments (clays), although some vegetable pigments were used. The paint brushes were of willow or cottonwood, porous bone, or antelope hair. The skin paintings usually told the story of some exploit of an individual. They were painted only by the men.

Plains Indian painting was not limited to the decoration of skins. Many articles of daily use were painted with colored geometric designs or life forms (realistic figures and animals), for the Indian was not satisfied with things that were merely useful. He preferred to enhance the homely object by decorating it with attractive designs. All of the designs were not painted. Articles were frequently decorated with porcupine quills, sea shells, bone beads, and later glass beads which were obtained from the white trader. The Plains Indian produced a great variety of useful objects which were tastefully ornamented with abstract designs or life forms. The parfleche, calumet, shield, quiver, medicine bag, basket, pottery, tepee cover and lining were usually decorated with geometric designs, although life forms were sometimes used.

Whether one wants to consider Oklahoma a young state or perhaps the oldest on the continent culturally, one can find interesting evidence to support one's choice.

THE EARLY ARTISTS IN OKLAHOMA

For countless ages this continent was the habitat of animals and the roving red man. Ultimately the lure of the unknown and the quest for wealth irresistibly drew the hardy adventurer who opened up the new world. A vast area with alluring opportunities for riches and development was revealed.

Artists were attracted to the Indian Territory; they were lured westward by the prospect of unusual subject matter to be found among the Indians.

It is not generally known that artists were painting in the Indian Territory during the first half of the 19th century. George Catlin in 1834, John Mix Stanley in 1843, and Heinrich Baldwin Möllhausen in 1853 were the first to come into the present Oklahoma.

George Catlin (1796-1872) became interested in the Plains Indians while he was studying art. He decided to go into the remote Western regions to paint and record Indian history and customs. In 1834 Catlin was the first trained artist to paint at Fort Gibson, Indian Territory. He made a journey with Colonel Henry Dodge, Lieutenant Colonel S. W. Kearney, and the First Regiment of the Mounted Dragoons. The expedition traveled west to the Wichita Mountains. For four years Catlin sketched, painted, and kept a journal of his experiences with the Indians. He made more than six hundred paintings of the little-known territory and painted the first portraits of the Plains Indian.

Technically, Catlin's work is sometimes crude and primitive but most of his scenes were painted in the field as he saw them ... his work was often hurried due to circumstances...but what he captured for posterity amounts to a collection of documents on the American Indian which cannot be duplicated.³

Most of George Catlin's paintings and drawings are in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C. The Thomas Gilcrease Institute of American History and Art at Tulsa, Oklahoma, owns about two hundred of his paintings. The Oklahoma City Public Library at Oklahoma City has a copy of the first original Catlin portfolio published in London, England, in 1844.

John Mix Stanley (1814-1872) was the second artist-illustrator and historian to visit the Indian Territory that is now Oklahoma. In 1843, Stanley accompanied Governor Pierce M. Butler of South Carolina to a council meeting of the Indian tribes living west of the Mississippi River. Stanley made a painted record of the Intertribal Council Meeting at Tahlequah, Indian Territory. He also made portraits of many prominent Indian families. Unfortunately most of John Mix Stanley's work was lost in a fire which destroyed the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, D.C. in 1865.

Heinrich Baldwin Mollhausen (1825-1905), German-born artist and author, crossed the Indian Territory in 1853 with the Pacific Railway Survey, under the command of Lieutenant A. W. Whipple. Mollhausen was the expedition's official artist and topographer.

The expedition left Fort Smith, Arkansas, in July to travel across the whole of the Indian Territory. Mollhausen's engrossing journal is a part of the Oklahoma State Historical Society's priceless Whipple Collection, which includes a number of drawings and water-color paintings made at Bridgeport in western Oklahoma and Camp Arbuckle near Byars, Oklahoma, just south of the Canadian River.

Frederic Remington (1861-1909) with his excellent training in the Yale School of Art and Art Student's League in New York became an outstanding painter, illustrator, and reporter of the Western frontier. He was fascinated by the men of the West, both white and Indian. Remington dared paint the West, its people, and its action in an entirely realistic and authentic manner. Wherever he went he sketched quickly, training himself to render the moment of action and emotion.

After roving over the Southwest with military and cowboy outfits, Remington came to Fort Sill, Oklahoma Territory, where he settled for a time. Attracted by the Comanche horsemanship, he roamed the prairie region.

Remington's work was gaining favor in the West, where he made a few sales. In 1885 he took a portfolio of his work to New York. The work was well received, and soon it was much in demand. Some of his paintings were accepted by the National Academy in Philadelphia, and they began to win awards.

In 1895 Remington made his first sculpture, "Bronco Buster." The sculpture was cast in bronze and all copies sold immediately. Remington's sculpture requires no verbal interpretation. People of all ages are awed by his men and horses in bronze. He made twenty-five different models in this series of Western horses.

. . . After half a century his art is often the best available when a good western picture is needed to illustrate a point or event. This continued use is a real tribute to the undated freshness of his art.⁴

. . . the art of Frederic Remington created in permanent form the romance, glamour and reality of the Old West and did so in an artistic manner that has universal appeal.⁵

Narcissa Chisholm Owen (1883-1911) was born at Webbers Falls, Indian Territory. She was educated at the College of Evansville, Indiana, where she showed some ability for art.

Narcissa Owen was a painter of more than average talent. Her portrait of several descendants of Thomas Jefferson was awarded a medal at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904. The Oklahoma State Historical Society now owns the medal and a self-portrait of the artist painted in 1896.

Samuel Holmberg (1885-1911) was educated at Bethany College, Lindsborg, Kansas, and at Paris, France; he was a draftsman, painter, and sculptor.

In 1908 Holmberg came to the University of Oklahoma as chairman of the newly organized department of art. After a successful school year he arranged the first student art exhibit at the University. Of Holmberg's own work few canvases remain, as he destroyed all except the best. Dr. O. B. Jacobson, professor emeritus and former director of the University of Oklahoma School of Art, owns one of his canvases.

Holmberg's good friend Dr. Jacobson said of him:

. . . It was he who established the tradition of artistic honesty that my staff and I did our best to continue, and that made our art school respected all over the United States. The fact that he came and passed through Oklahoma shall not disappear completely.⁶

Lawrence Pickett Williams (1899-1927) was born near Prague, Oklahoma. He entered the University of Oklahoma in 1918, graduating from the College of Fine Arts and the College of Arts and Sciences.

In 1924, Williams studied in the Yale University School of Art and was awarded the Beaux Arts Institute prize, a national honor which entitled him to a year's study abroad, but he chose to return to the University of Oklahoma as an instructor in art. He was made assistant professor of art in 1927. During the summers Williams traveled and painted in the Southwest, where he developed his talent, his ideas, and his philosophy. He was noted throughout the state for his courageous portrayal of the savage moods of nature. A collection of eighty-eight paintings, both oils and water colors, was exhibited as a memorial to him in 1930 when the School of Art moved into the renovated library building.

Nellie (Ellen) Shepherd (1877-1920), Kansas born, came into the Oklahoma Territory in 1890. She showed drawing ability at an early age, and she was encouraged by her mother who gave her the first art lessons. Later Miss Shepherd studied at the Academy of Fine Arts (the Art Institute) in Cincinnati, Ohio; she then went to Paris, where she studied with Henri Martin for three years. A portrait of her sister, Miss Lottie, was one of the two accepted for the "Grand Salon" of 1910. It was awarded honorable mention.

She returned home for a short time before going to Arizona because of her health, where she developed a freer style in painting.

The Oklahoma Art League owns several of Miss Shepherd's paintings, but the majority of them remain in the Shepherd home at 2237 N.W. 23rd St., Oklahoma City. The paintings are a gift to Shepherd Manor (a home for the aged maintained by the First Presbyterian Church), endowed by Lottie and Edith Shepherd.

John Noble (1874-1935) was born in Wichita, Kansas. He loved the immensity of the plains, the limitless horizon and the subtle coloring of the Southwest.

In 1893, Noble was present at the opening of the Cherokee Strip. Later he painted "The Run", a seven by eight foot canvas which he hoped to see hanging in the Oklahoma State Capitol. The painting did hang in Governor E. W. Harland's office during his tenure. Later Mr. Frank Phillips acquired the painting, and it is now in the Woolaroc Museum near Bartlesville, Oklahoma. This painting represents one of the most dramatic incidents of Oklahoma history. Noble was a member of the National Academy of Design and made his reputation as a painter of the sea.

Henrietta Clopath (1862-1936) was born and grew up in Aigle, Switzerland. She studied art in Dresden, Munich, and Paris. She had several years' teaching experience before coming to the United States. In 1885 she arrived at the University of Minnesota to act as chairman of the Department of Art. She taught for a number of years before coming to Tulsa, where she opened an art studio. She gave private art lessons and painted landscapes in the impressionist style. Miss Clopath exhibited her work in New York, Philadelphia, Indianapolis, and at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904. She won a gold medal for her painting "Boats at Sunset" in 1916 at the first official exhibition of the Oklahoma Artists Association in Norman.

Patricio Gimeno (1864-1940) was born in Peru. He was sent to Spain to be educated, where he showed so much interest in art that he was allowed to study in the Valencia Academy of Art.

After traveling and painting in several countries, Gimeno came to the United States, where he heard accounts of the limitless opportunities to be found in Oklahoma. He then came to Oklahoma City, where he accepted a position at the Hpworth University (Oklahoma City University). A short time afterward he became an instructor of art at the University of Oklahoma for five years. Later he was made chairman of the Romance Language Department in that University.

During the summer Gimeno painted landscapes in southern California; he also painted portraits of many of the presidents and professors of the University of Oklahoma. A number of these portraits now hang in the Bizzell Memorial Library of the University of Oklahoma.

Anna H. (Mrs. Edward H.) Miller (1863-1941) was a painter of note and a patron of art in the early days of Oklahoma City and a charter member of the Oklahoma Art League. Mrs. Miller selected and donated many pictures to the Oklahoma Art League's permanent collection. She was active in the Association of Oklahoma Artists and encouraged many deserving students by purchasing their work.

In 1944, Mrs. Miller's painting "California Landscape" was given the place of honor as the "Masterpiece of the Month" at the Oklahoma Art Center. Later Mr. Miller gave the canvas to the Oklahoma Art League as a memorial to his wife.

Father Gregory Gerrer (1867-1946), an Alsacian by birth, came to America in 1871. His family settled on a farm in Missouri, and later moved to Iowa, where he was educated. At nineteen, young Gerrer began traveling, finally coming to Oklahoma Territory. He began to give instruction in music at Guthrie and joined the choir of St. Mary's Catholic church in 1892. A short time later Gerrer entered the Sacred Heart Abbey in Shawnee to become a Benedictine priest. In 1896 he seriously began the study of art, showing great aptitude for portraiture. After being ordained to the priesthood in 1900, Father Gerrer went to Paris, Rome, Florence, and Venice to study the old masters. While in Rome he was granted permission to paint a portrait of Pope Pius X. The portrait was finished in 1904 and was exhibited at the St. Louis Exposition that year.

Father Gerrer was appointed assistant pastor of the Church of St. Benedict in Shawnee. There he was able to display his growing collection of historical artifacts, give instruction in painting, and paint many portraits.

Father Gerrer was a charter member and the first president in 1916 of the Association of the Oklahoma Artists which met in Dr. O. B. Jacobson's office at the University of Oklahoma. In 1917, Father Gerrer went to the University of Notre Dame to restore a collection of European paintings. He remained there as director of the art school and taught painting for twelve summers. Gerrer painted portraits, landscapes from all the countries that he had visited, also still lifes, and religious paintings.

Father Gerrer established the first museum in Oklahoma in 1919. The museum was located on the St. Gregory's College campus at Shawnee. Father Gerrer's lifelong dedication to collecting art and artifacts from every period and all parts of the world has given Oklahomans a rich heritage. The exhibits include art objects from Egypt, Babylonia, Persia, Greece, and Rome and artifacts from the Indian cultures of Central and South America and North America.

The museum has a number of paintings by Renaissance artists, among them the work attributed to Il Guercino, Raphael, Aretino Spinello, Murillo, Guido Reni, Jose de Ribera, and "The Adoration of the Magi" by Guile Romano. Also the collection has several water colors by the Kiowa artists Steve Hopope, Spencer Asah, James Auchiah, Jack Hokeah, and Monroe Tea-To-Ke, the first Indian painters to be trained at the University of Oklahoma. The Junior League of Oklahoma City has underwritten and coordinated the collection, which is presently on loan to the Science and Arts Foundation, Fair Park, Oklahoma City.

Martha Avey (1877-1943) was born on a farm near Arcola, Illinois. The family came to Oklahoma in 1892 when Miss Avey was fifteen years old. Her interest in art began at an early age and continued throughout her life. Miss Avey attended the Chicago Art Institute for four years and was awarded a diploma; she then attended the Parson's School of Art in New York City for one year.

In 1906, Miss Avey was made supervisor of the new art program of the Oklahoma City School system, and she made plans for the first art curriculum. She remained as supervisor for six years. Miss Avey gave up her position because of family illness and afterward painted and gave private art lessons at home. During this time Miss Avey had a year of travel and study in Europe.

In 1925, Miss Avey was asked to join the Oklahoma City University faculty to direct the organization of the new department of art. She remained as chairman until her retirement in 1933.

Martha Avey was a member of the Association of Oklahoma Artists, the Art League, and Art Renaissance Club of Oklahoma City. Mrs. Nan Sheets, director of the Oklahoma Art Center, said of her:

A shy modest, retiring person, Miss Avey never received the recognition that she deserved. She was self-critical and aspired always to greater perfection. Miss Avey was quite versatile as she painted landscapes, still life and portraits in both oil and water color. She was inclined toward conservatism in her own work but friendly and open-minded toward modern movements.⁷

Although she retained a fine sense of tonal values, Miss Avey's later paintings became large and vigorous. She made a series of studies of the wild flowers of Oklahoma which were well received. The flower series was included in a national traveling exhibit. The Oklahoma City Art League owns "The Hindu," one of her paintings.

Elbridge Ayer Burbank (1858-1949) was born in Illinois. He began his art training in Chicago's Academy of Design in 1874. He studied in Munich, Germany, from 1886 to 1892. Admirably trained in portraiture, Burbank had been very successful with a series of Negro portraits before turning to the Indians in Oklahoma Territory. He painted Geronimo, the Apache warrior and the most famous of the chiefs. This portrait was followed by many others of the typical men, women, and children of the different Indian tribes. Burbank selected characteristic types of Indians; his portraits were done with a rigorous exactness and constitute a graphic and accurate record of the tribal and ceremonial costumes. The work has historical truth and value. Easily the master of Indian portraiture, Burbank lived for a number of years in California; after his death, about 1,250 pieces of his work were purchased and presented to the Newberry Library in Chicago.

Acee Blue Eagle (1910-1959), or Alex McIntosh, of Creek-Pawnee parentage, was born near Anadarko, Oklahoma. In the autumn of 1916, Acee Blue Eagle entered the government school, Hayska, near Bristow, Oklahoma. Six years later he attended Haskell Institute at Lawrence, Kansas, and then Chillico Indian (high) School, Arkansas City, Kansas. While attending the Chillico Indian School, Blue Eagle discovered water colors and began to paint posters, costumed portraits and scenes from tribal history. He was awarded an athletic scholarship by Bacone College at Bacone, Oklahoma. He was also encouraged by Dr. Jacobson at the University of Oklahoma. The colors in Blue Eagle's paintings were brilliant, the designs individualistic, and they presented the philosophy, the whimsy, and the egotism of the Indian.

After Blue Eagle began to receive national recognition as a painter and was given a number of P.W.A.P. (Public Works of Art Project) mural commissions. He painted more than three thousand works, and many were exhibited in major art centers. He lectured on Indian art and studied in Oxford, England, in 1950. Blue Eagle served as chairman of the art department at Bacone College.

Blue Eagle was a painter, lecturer, dancer, and writer. In 1938, in an interview with Richard M. Caldwell of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman staff, Blue Eagle said: "It is my ambition to stimulate and foster the growth of the American Indian artist."

Adah M. Robinson (1882-1962), a pioneer in art in the Southwest, was born in Richmond, Indiana, and received her early training at Earlham College. Later she studied at the Chicago Art Institute, Broadmoor Academy, and West End School of Art, Provincetown, Rhode Island.

Miss Robinson's first teaching position was at Epworth College (Oklahoma City University), where she was an instructor of art from 1907 to 1909. In 1911 she went to Tulsa Central High School to teach for four years. Miss Robinson became the art supervisor of the Tulsa city schools in 1915, a position she held for nine years. She organized the first traveling exhibition of art in Oklahoma in 1913 while teaching in Central High School. Miss Robinson was chairman of the department of art at the University of Tulsa from 1928 to 1945. She was instrumental in the founding of the art section of the Oklahoma Education Association.

Miss Robinson was a water colorist; some of her paintings are now owned by the Oklahoma Art Center. Her greatest achievement in art was the designing of Tulsa's Boston Avenue Methodist Church in 1925. She wrote of this structure;

We revere the traditional Gothic form of church architecture because it is the highest and sincerest expression of structure and ideals of that time. We have arrived at a different age. Religious opinion of the modern period is not final --- the opinion of no person ever can be --- it represents the growth and understanding of spiritual laws. Despite our denominational differences in dogma and organization, there is unity of the deepest spiritual motives and the modern church should challenge saner thinking and a clearer vision of practical Christian principles.⁸

Alpha Rho Tau, a civic art group, was founded by Miss Robinson in 1930, and has established a memorial fund in her honor. The fund has as its basis the sale of a recording of a lecture by Miss Robinson on "The Philosophy of Beauty." The income from the endowment will be used for awards to Tulsa Central High School students. The first award was presented in 1963 to Margaret Freeman and Barbara Parsons.

Grace Chadwick (1893-1962) was born in Craig, Missouri. She was educated in Oklahoma, receiving B.F.A. and M.F.A. degrees from the University of Oklahoma. She also attended the University of Chicago, the Chicago Art Institute, the New York School of Fine Arts, the Broadmoor Art Academy, and the Chouinard School of Art, Los Angeles, California.

⁸Mrs. Nan Sheets. Adah Robinson on the Boston Avenue Methodist Church, The Daily Oklahoman, December 13, 1942.

Miss Chadwick was selected by the MacDowell Club of Allied Arts for a month's creative work at the MacDowell Colony, Peterborough, New Hampshire, in 1946. She was the thirteenth Oklahoman so honored.

In 1916, Miss Chadwick began her teaching career in Central High School at Oklahoma City; she was the art supervisor of the Oklahoma City Public Schools from 1944 until her retirement in 1958. She was made chairman of the art department of Oklahoma City Christian College in 1959, a position she held until her death.

A painter in both oil and water color, Miss Chadwick's work had notable color harmony and a depth of feeling for her subject matter. She exhibited at the University of California; Broadmoor Art Academy; The California School of Arts and Crafts; the Mid-Western Artists Exhibition, Kansas City, Missouri; and the Association of Oklahoma Artists, Oklahoma City.

In October, 1962, a group of art teachers of Norman and Oklahoma City organized and established an award to commemorate the teaching and leadership of Miss Chadwick. A memorial fund will provide an annual award to an outstanding art student.

ART IN OKLAHOMA PUBLIC SCHOOLS

When Oklahoma was admitted into the Union in 1907, an educational system had been developed which was superior to that of most pioneer states. The rapid settling of Oklahoma by people who had come from states which had gone through the pioneer period in education, and the establishment of national systems of education among the Five Civilized Tribes years earlier, gave Oklahoma an advantage over most other new states.

Because the missionaries were the first to establish schools in the West, they became the first teachers of art. As early as 1869 art instruction was given in the mission schools. Line drawing and a kind of mechanical drawing were about the limit of the art curriculum.

It is believed that Alice Moores Harn (1855-1931) was the first person to teach art in Oklahoma City. She came to the Oklahoma Territory in 1891 as the bride of W. F. Harn. Mrs. Harn had been given art training in Cincinnati, Ohio, and at the National Academy of Design in New York City. In 1892 she took a number of private art students. One of her paintings, "The Section-line Sentinel", was put in the permanent collection at the Oklahoma Art Center in 1950 by Mrs. Jasper Sipes.

Mrs. Lilah Denton Lindsay (1890-1943), a pioneer teacher of Tulsa and an art enthusiast, was educated in Ohio and became a teacher at the Wealaka Indian Boarding School near what is now Bixby, Oklahoma, in 1884. She also taught in the first school opened in Tulsa in 1893, located on the site now occupied by the Tulsa City Hall. In 1954 a Tulsa elementary school building was named in her honor.

Art was slow in coming to the pioneer schools; the early settlers were too busy earning a livelihood to be concerned with such frivolities as picture-making in the schools, although some instruction was provided in the schools of the larger cities. No school employed a supervisor of art before 1905.

Miss Martha Avey became the first supervisor of art for the Oklahoma City public school system in 1906. A year later, in 1907, Miss Jessie Timmin was appointed supervisor of art in the Tulsa school system.

As late as 1922 only a few high schools offered an art program in their curriculums, and then only on a limited scale. School art at this time was largely copying and coloring.

Marjorie Dodge Tapp (1884-), of Shawnee, has long been with the art movement in Oklahoma. She has lived for many years in Shawnee, seeing the community grow from a village into a thriving modern city. Mrs. Tapp began teaching art in the Shawnee High School in 1916 and remained there as a supervisor until her retirement in 1950.

Edna Bradley Stevenson (1887-) became the head of the Art Department of Oklahoma City Classen High School in 1920. In 1943 she was made director of art at Oklahoma City University. She has an outstanding record as an artist, educator, and administrator.

Adah M. Robinson (1882-1962), Grace Chadwick (1893-1962), Ida Hoover (1892-), Mattie Jarrot (1884-), Edna Remington (1877-1957), Lucile Adams (1895-), and Edna Bradley Stevenson (1887-) were other art supervisors, teachers and leaders of the state of Oklahoma.

P.W.A.P.

(Public Works of Art Project)

The early years of the 1930's saw the beginning of the depression. It is obvious that the professional artist would be among the first to feel the impact of the decline in business conditions. The Public Works of Art Project endeavored to give employment to competent artists, and also to perform a public service of permanent character by placing works of art in public buildings.

On December 8, 1933, the first government art program, the Public Works of Art Project, was established, and along with it, the Fine Arts Section of the Treasury Department, as an emergency agency. The artists utilized in the program were selected on the basis of professional qualifications and need of employment. The Public Works of Art Project, with a completely liberal policy toward the artist, and made it possible for a great number of artists to work on a subject of their choosing.

Mr. Edward Bruce served as the national director of the project. Mr. Homer Heck of Norman, Oklahoma was the director of the Public Works of Art Project in Oklahoma. Dr. O. B. Jacobson acted as chairman of the committee in Oklahoma; Mrs. Nan Sheets served as the state supervisor; Mr. Oliver G. Heeks was the assistant director of the Oklahoma Art Center; Mr. Maurice de Vinna was the director of the extension galleries which were established in Claremore, Clinton, Muskogee, Henryetta, and Elk City.

The Art Center which was established in Tulsa was closed in 1938 because of dissension among its directors. During its brief period of operation, it, in conjunction with the Tulsa Art Association, was popular with the public and sponsored several large national and state-wide exhibitions.

Through the federal programs...the painter, sculptor and designer were given the opportunity to participate in a countrywide experiment whose scale and purpose were something new in the world - the Federal Art Projects. These were the culmination of previous gestures toward patronage by a country which had no Department of Fine Arts. For more than a century such matters had been handled by different committees, officials and departments, most recently by Edward Bruce under the Civil Works Administration and then by the Fine Arts Section of the Treasury Department. It was obvious by 1935 that the present plan could not absorb the thousands of jobless writers, musicians, sculptors, painters, designers, photographers and actors; and in the summer of that year (1935) the Federal Arts Projects of Works Progress Administration were established not only to give these people work and relief but as one of the directors said, to feed the hunger of millions for music, books, plays and pictures.⁹

In October, 1936, the Fine Arts Section of the Treasury Department initiated a series of competitions which the artist could enter anonymously. The awards were made before the artists' names were disclosed in these competitions. The projects consisted of murals, easel paintings, sculpture, and ceramics for schools, libraries, and other public buildings. The completed projects were to be "on loan" to public institutions or placed permanently in established community art centers.

The Public Works Art Project placed murals in a number of public buildings in Oklahoma. The following is a partial list.

INDIAN ART

The Plains Indians - more than thirty tribes - were scattered over the Great Plains and Rocky Mountain region. With the arrival of the Spaniard and the horse, the Indian became fully nomadic. In this new way of life the Indian came to use only unbreakable and portable articles. Art expression was restricted to the decoration and embellishment of everyday objects; the Indian's tipis, columns, shields, clothing bags, and storage cases.

About 1920, Miss Susan Peters, a field worker with the Indian Agency in Anadarko, saw the Indian artists at work. She became interested in their work, encouraging the youths, obtaining scholarships, exhibiting and selling their paintings. Miss Peters was able to interest Dr. O. B. Jacobson, director of the School of Art of the University of Oklahoma, in the young Kiowa artists. Monroe Tsa-To-Ke (1904-1937), Jack Hokeah (1902-), Spencer Asah (1905-1954), Steve Hoxope (1902-), and Bou-ge-tah (Loie) Smokey (1907-) were the first young Kiowa artists to come as special students to the School of Art in the University of Oklahoma for training.

Miss Edith Mahier's sympathetic help and able guidance led these young Kiowas to produce jewellike masterpieces. They painted dances, rituals, and ceremonials of tribal life. Painting without models, they produced figures full of movement, rhythm, and balance. The costumes were faithfully reproduced, and the detail was symbolic and meaningful.

Mr. Lew Wentz, of Ponca City, generously supplied the young Indians with a stipend from January to May, enabling them to devote all of their time to creative work. During the 1930's a portion of the Public Works Art Project funds were allocated to the Indian artists.

The young artists were awarded contracts for murals to be painted for public buildings.

In 1929 a folio of Kiowa Indian art was published in a limited edition in France. There were thirty-one color plates showing the work of the first five Kiowas who had studied at the School of Art in the University of Oklahoma. Dr. O. B. Jacobson and his wife Jeanne d'Ucel wrote the introduction for the folio. In 1950 a second volume, Les Peintres Indiens d'Amérique, was published; this folio included the work of Indian artists from many Oklahoma tribes. The two folios are in the Phillips Collection in the Bizzell Library at the University of Oklahoma.

Dr. O. B. Jacobson and his wife Jeanne d'Ucel said of the Indian painters:

The truly modern phase of Indian art began with the Kiowas, who are Plains Indians. They were the first to be able to develop their art without losing the essential elements of their traditions. They enriched it with a personal expression; they breathed life into the rigid impassive figures; they possess an extraordinary natural flair for color and for composition...The work of these Kiowas caused a sensation and was acclaimed the most interesting part of the American entry at the International Art Exhibit held in Prague, Czechoslovakia in 1928.¹⁰

Many talented Indians came to the University of Oklahoma for training in art. Some of these were Woody Bigbow, Walker Boone, Alan Busyhead, Archie Blackowl, Frank O. Colbert, Woodrow Crumbo, Jesse Davis, Cecil Dick, Paul Goodbear, Franklin Gritts, Allen Houser, Solomon McCombs, Joseph Morris, Cecil Murdock, and Larry Saupity, Terry C. Saul, Marie Terasag, Herman Toppah, and Dick West. Their work and the work of many other Indian painters can be seen in museums and in exhibitions over the state. Some painters follow the flat two-dimensional style of traditional Indian paintings, while others paint in the modern objective and abstract styles.

In 1946, Victor C. Hurt, president of the Southwestern Art Association, and Bernard Frazier, director of Philbrook Art Center in Tulsa, Oklahoma, planned and organized the first museum-sponsored national competition for Indian artists. This comprehensive annual show has given impetus to and widened the scope of Indian painting. In 1964 the Nineteenth Annual American Indian Artists Exhibition was held at Philbrook Art Center. This exhibition not only preserves art but is a documentary of dress, customs, folkways, dances, and ceremonials of the Indian people. There is always one member of Indian descent on the jury which award the prizes at these competitions.

An exhibition of contemporary American Indian paintings were assembled and prepared for exhibition by the office of Harrison Kerr, Dean of the College of Fine Arts in 1958, under a United States government grant received by the University of Oklahoma through the United States Information Agency in Washington, D. C.

Sixty paintings were selected by a jury consisting of members of the faculty of the University of Oklahoma School of Art: Emilio Amaro, widely known Mexican muralist and lithographer; Eugene Bevinger, chairman of the department of design, John O'Neil, director of the School of Art, William Harold Smith, director of the Museum of Art of the University of Oklahoma, with Dean Kerr as chairman. Oklahoma's Kiowa artists Monroe Tsa To Ke and Stephen Mopope's paintings were included in the exhibition.

Almost half of the paintings in the exhibition were from collections of the Museum of Art of the University of Oklahoma.

The exhibition was sent to Rome, Italy, Vienna, Innsbruck, Salzburg, Graz, Bregenz, Austria and Stuttgart, Frankfurt, Munich, Bremen, Kiel, Hanover, Koblenz, Kaiserlautern, Heidelberg, Berlin, Germany.

MUSEUMS IN OKLAHOMA

The present Oklahoma Art Center at Oklahoma City was an outgrowth of the 1933 Federal Arts Project. The Center, located in the Commerce Exchange Building, was originally titled the Experimental Art Gallery. It soon outgrew its quarters and moved to West Second Street with a more expanded program. In 1937 the Art Center was given five large galleries in the new Municipal Auditorium. It remained there until December, 1958, when a site for the new Art Center was provided on a long-term-lease basis on city owned property at Fair Park. The beautiful circular building was provided through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Kirkpatrick of Oklahoma City, the Beaux Arts Ball Society, and the fund-raising activities sponsored by the Oklahoma Art Center Association. This new Center marks a milestone in the cultural progress of Oklahoma.

Philbrook Art Center was opened to the citizens of Tulsa in 1939, a gift from Mr. and Mrs. Waite Phillips. The building, patterned after an Italian Renaissance villa in Florence was completed in 1927. It is surrounded by spacious grounds and gardens. The Beacon and the Elliot buildings were also a gift to Tulsa from Mr. and Mrs. Phillips, and both are a source of income for the maintenance of the Philbrook Art Center. The properties are administered by the trustees of the Southwestern Art Association.

Philbrook Art Center has a number of permanent collections on display. Among them are the Samuel H. Kress Collection of Italian Renaissance painting and sculpture; the George H. Taber Collection of Chinese jade; the Laura A. Clubb Collection; and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey Collection of paintings of the oil industry. In addition, an outstanding American Indian collection is always on display. The Clark Field Collection of American Indian Baskets and Pottery is distinguished for its rarity, and the American Indian paintings in Philbrook attract nationwide attention.

The Thomas Gilcrease Institute of American History and Art was founded in 1942 by Thomas Gilcrease, a Tulsa oilman, whose aim was to bring cultural inspiration to the Southwest. Legal title to the twelve-million-dollar collection of Americana was transferred to the city of Tulsa in 1955. The museum building is situated on a thirteen-acre tract overlooking the city of Tulsa. In 1961 the people of Tulsa voted a $600,000 bond issue to be used to expand the facilities of this museum. This extensive new building was opened to the public in October, 1963. Thomas Gilcrease died in 1962 and was entombed on the hillside near the museum in 1964.

The Institute owns a treasury of artifacts relating to prehistoric America. The collections include pre-Columbian artifacts and early Americana relating to the settlement of the Southwest. The world's largest collection of Western paintings by George Catlin, Frederic Remington, and Thomas Moran are housed here.

Woolaroc Museum, synthetically named for "wood, lake, and rocks," is located on the Frank Phillips Ranch near Bartlesville. This museum was established in 1929 by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Phillips, but is now owned and operated by the Frank Phillips Foundation. It is dedicated to "the boys and girls of today, the fathers and mothers of tomorrow." Among the artifacts which it owns is an outstanding collection from the Great Temple near Spiro, Oklahoma. The western painters Remington, Russell, and Leigh are well represented. The Woolaroc Museum collection includes the twelve original models submitted to the Ponca City Pioneer Woman competition under the auspices of E. W. Marland in 1930.

The Museum of Art, on the University of Oklahoma Campus, occupies Jacobson Hall which was named for Dr. O. B. Jacobson, former director of the School of Art and the Museum of Art. The museum was established in 1936. The museum's seven galleries house many fine paintings and sculptures. A valuable collection of ancient painting, sculpture, and minor arts from China, India, Nepal, Persia, and Tibet was a gift from the late Lew H. Wentz and R. Gordon Matzene of Ponca City, Oklahoma. The collection is valued at $250,000.

The Leonard J. Woodruff Collection, Ardmore, Oklahoma, consisting of sixteenth and seventeenth century painting, is on permanent loan to the University of Oklahoma. In 1939 the museum received a collection of etching, lithographs, and American Indian paintings, oils, and water colors from the federal government P.W.A. Project and the New Mexico Federal Art Project.

The University of Oklahoma was able to purchase, in 1948, a collection of very fine paintings by contemporary American artists. These paintings had been collected by the United States government to be exhibited abroad in 1945. Secretary of State George C. Marshall saw them in Prague, Czechoslovakia. He found the exhibit so distasteful that he asked President Harry S. Truman to recall it. The paintings were stored for a year and then offered for sale to the highest bidder. The University of Oklahoma was fortunate to receive thirty-six of the paintings at about 5 per cent of their value. Notable among these paintings are Georgia O'Keeffe's "Coe Cob," Jack Levine's "White Horse," Ben Shahn's "Renaissance," Julio de Diego's "Nocturnal Family," Loren Meiver's "Blue Dunes," Abraham Rattner's

"The Yellow Table," and Max Weber's "Two Vases,"

Work by local and regional artists and circulating exhibitions from national and international sources are included in the museum's exhibitions, which average about thirty annually. A catalog of the current exhibitions may be obtained from the office of the Museum of Art, the University of Oklahoma.

No Man's Land Historical Museum is located on the campus of the Panhandle Agricultural and Mechanical College in Goodwell, Oklahoma. This museum was organized as The Panhandle Museum in 1932 by the faculty, students, and friends of the college. The museum building was made possible by a thirty-thousand-dollar grant from the state legislature and matched with funds donated by the No Man's Land Historical Society. The museum departments include pioneer history, anthropology, biology, geology, an art gallery, and a library and archives section. Ten one-man art shows are usually held each year.

East Central State College Museum, in Ada, Oklahoma, was established in 1954 to assist various departments of the college in the presentation of more vital subject matter and to aid in the perpetuation of the local and regional historical flavor. Collections of contemporary prints and drawings, the R. R. Kinsey collection of Anasazi artifacts, and the Frances Wintersmith collection of furniture are housed here.

In 1957 the Oklahoma Museum of Conservative Art was established in Oklahoma City. The primary purpose of the organization was to provide exhibition space for the work of its members, although other art collections are shown.

The First Presbyterian Art Gallery was established in Mangum, Oklahoma, in 1959, by the First Presbyterian Church of Mangum, with Reverend J. Allen Anderson acting as sponsor. This gallery was opened as a public service of the church to encourage interest in art.

5207 Gallery was organized in 1959 by the members of the Junior League of Oklahoma City to present the work of contemporary artists.

The Museum of the Great Plains was established in Lawton, Oklahoma, in 1960 to portray the broad sweep of human history of the Great Plains of North America. This museum, financed by endowments and membership fees, has an annual income of about thirty thousand dollars. The permanent collection consists of Plains Indian artifacts, historical items, pioneer vehicles, and fine arts in all media.

EXHIBITIONS OF ART

Oklahoma has five major art competitions yearly. Two of the exhibitions are at Tulsa, and three are at Oklahoma City. Several lesser exhibitions are held in other cities of the state.

The first Oklahoma Artists Annual Exhibition was sponsored by Philbrook Art Center in 1940. The exhibition is open to all Oklahoma artists and to Oklahomans living out of the state. The classifications are painting, sculpture, graphics, and decorative art. Several awards are offered in each classification, with a "grand award" open to all media.

The annual American Indian Artists Exhibition is of national scope and is sponsored by the Philbrook Art Center. This exhibition was organized in 1946 by Bernard Frazier, director of the Philbrook Art Center, and Victor C. Hurt, president of the Southwestern Art Association, for artists of American Indian descent. The classifications of entry are geographical (Woodland, Plains, and Southwest), with a special classification for contemporary Indian painting; also, there is a classification for sculpture. All entries must be for sale. At least one member of the jury for this competition must be of Indian descent.

In 1963 the Waite Phillips award was presented for the first time at the American Indian Artists Exhibition. This award will be given annually in addition to the other awards, and it can be won only once by a single artist. When making this award, the jury will consider the artist's contribution to Indian art and to the Philbrook exhibition over the years. Fred Beaver, of Ardmore, Oklahoma was the first to receive this honor.

The Annual Southwest American Painting Exhibition was organized in 1959. It is sponsored in collaboration with three cultural agencies:

the Oklahoma Art Center, the State Fair, and the Museum of Art of the University of Oklahoma. The artists of eight southwestern states -- Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas -- are invited to participate in the exhibition. There are five purchase awards.

The Annual All-Oklahoma Exhibition is sponsored by the Oklahoma Art Center. The first exhibition was held in 1959. All resident artists of Oklahoma and former Oklahoma artists residing elsewhere are invited to participate; all media in painting and sculpture are eligible; each artist is permitted three entries. Five purchase awards are made in each exhibition.

The National Exhibition of Contemporary American Art is sponsored annually by the Oklahoma Printmaker's Society. The exhibition is held in the Oklahoma Art Center. The first exhibition was held in 1959.

The Oklahoma Museum of Conservative Art sponsored a state-wide exhibition in 1962. This was the first all-state exhibition for the organization. The classifications were oil, water color, pastel, and graphics.

The Annual Festival of Arts is sponsored by the Junior League of Oklahoma City. It is an open-air exhibition held on the Mall at Penn Square Shopping Center. The classifications include painting, prints, sculpture, ceramics, mosaics, and china-painting. The awards are contributed by the merchants of the Penn Square Shopping Center, and by individual donors. The first exhibition was held in 1956.

The Business Men in Art Exhibition is sponsored by the Oklahoma Science and Art Foundation. The first exhibition was held in 1963. Men in professions, business, and other occupations may participate.

The Muskogee Art Students Guild and the Service League are co-sponsors of the Annual Muskogee Art Exhibition. Any artist living within a radius of 150 miles of Muskogee is eligible to submit entries. This is a competitive exhibition.

The Annual Side-Walk Art Festival is sponsored by the Midwest City Pilot Club. The first exhibition was held in 1940. The exhibition is held in the Uptown, the Downtown, and the Lockheed shopping centers. The classifications are painting and sculpture in this competitive show.

The Annual Spring Art Show of Lawton, Oklahoma, is sponsored by the Greater Lawton Art Council. The classifications are painting, sculpture, and graphics. Three awards are given in each classification, and a "Best of the Show" award is given to the best entry in the combined classifications.

The Continental Oil Company of Ponca City, Oklahoma, sponsors contemporary art exhibitions. The exhibits are hung in the computer center, a modern building. W. B. Strobel, manager of the computer department, W. Guy Warren, assistant senior engineer, and D'Arcy Shock, director of the central research laboratories, aided in the planning and preparation of the Park Gallery. The exhibits are invitational, and each exhibit is shown for a month.

TWO DECADES OF ART

Art in the twentieth century has come to occupy a greater place in life than ever before. That it increasingly attracts the attention of the cultured, may be seen as evidence of its development.

In 1940 only a few works of art were submitted to the various exhibitions by a small number of Oklahoma artists. Since that time there has been a vigorous growth of art interest in the state. An increase in the number of entries in art exhibitions is not the only change noted. In these two decades there have been events, discoveries, and circumstances which have had a direct influence on art: a major world war, the Korean conflict and the war in the Far East, an ever-shrinking world in communications and travel, and the beginning of the atomic and space age.

Twenty years ago the picture titles in the art catalogs revealed the primary interest of the artists to be in the local scene, but as artists have been exposed to a kaleidoscopic variety of experiences there is a difference in the catalogs issued after 1940. During World War II servicemen saw the new directions in European art; many returned to study under the G.I. Bill or other such scholarships. With the perfection of truer and cheaper printing processes, art books with excellent color reproductions became available and added scope to the students' education. These factors, and an awareness of the stimulating vistas opened by science, have created new approaches to art. Artists today are creating symbols and images which pertain to the 1960's. The exhibitions reflect those changes that have taken place in art in the middle of the twentieth century.

This writer has made a reappraisal in a neglected field of research. This is a record of the growth of artistic activity in Oklahoma throughout the last two decades but there has been no attempt at critical evaluation of their work.

Sheldon Cheney in A New World of Art History says:

"The historian is inevitably caught between the two parties. He usually writes as if progress had stopped. He must, nevertheless, reassess the work of the Ages. The safest view point is that of thirty years back. In adopting one nearer to his own enjoyment he opens the way to judgment by an experience too personal and a perspective too short. If that has happened here, the fault may be in part atoned for by the continual stress upon art as a growing changing thing. Men now see, as for many centuries they did not, that there are no final rules for either creation or judgment."¹¹

CHAPTER III

THE BIOGRAPHIES OF OKLAHOMA ARTISTS

The artists whose biographies are included in this work are art educators, professional artists and a few non-professional artists living and working in this state. The biographical information has been edited and compiled from questionnaires returned by the artists. The degree of activity in art, and participation in exhibitions in the state in recent years was considered by a faculty committee making the final selection. Women artists are listed under their professional name with a cross reference for married names. This list has been arranged alphabetically with no regard to the accomplishments of the individual artist. The last known address is listed.
